Biographical/Historical Note:

On April 15, 1970, nurses at the Julia F. Burnham City Hospital (Champaign, Illinois) went on strike due to grievances about working conditions, including inadequate staffing levels, salary, and the hospital administration's refusal to recognize the nurses' representation by the Illinois Nurses Association. Nursing shortages during this period gave rise to several strikes. The Burnham strike followed one that took place in 1969 at the University of Chicago Hospitals, and preceded a strike that occurred in Ames, Iowa in the fall of 1970.

Frances Friedman, a registered nurse at Burnham City Hospital, served as chairman of the Illinois Nurses Association unit at the hospital in the months leading up to the strike. She was a key organizer and spokesperson for the striking group.

Scope and Content Note:

Most of the material contained in the collection was generated between February and September of 1970. There are some newspaper and magazine articles from later years, indicating that Friedman continued to follow relevant issues even after the strike ended and some grievances were resolved.

The collection contains handwritten notes, agendas, correspondence (signed and unsigned), and signed petition pages that reflect the events and plans leading to and including the strike. The contents of Frances Friedman's scrapbook and notebook are included, as are typed drafts of proposals and press releases. Other materials contained in the collection are press releases, newspaper coverage from the local paper, and publications from the Illinois and American Nurses Associations.

Copies of articles from magazines, government documents, and journals attest to Friedman's research and interest in collective bargaining. Her support for teachers and school nurses with workplace grievances is reflected in a letter to the editor and documents about Urbana schools and Chicago school nurses.
